remodeling

| BY JIM CORY |
| WITH EDITORIAL INTERN ERIN THIBEAU |

Home renovation is a unique business in a number of ways. One way is the sheer number of businesses that serve the market for fixing or altering the home. From full-scale remodeling to the neighborhood handyman who repairs a broken faucet, they number more than a half million separate business entities. Most are single proprietors or small companies with a truck or two. A minority are big enough to float a payroll.

So a $5 million remodeler is a large remodeler. The biggest company on this year's Remodeling 550 list — insurance restoration giant Belfor — generated more than $1 billion in sales of residential renovation. But Belfor is an exception, as is the next largest company on the list, Window World, with sales of more than $400 million.

The 550 companies included on the list are organized by business type, and type is defined by function. Full-service remodelers are general contractors whose forte is typically additions and alterations. Replacement contractors — replacing mostly exterior home components such as siding or roofing — install smaller jobs but far more of them. Insurance restoration companies rebuild homes following fire, flood, or other disaster with insurers footing the bill.

And, finally, there are franchise operations. Companies such as Grout Doctor or Mr. Sparky can be a point of entry for entrepreneurs with no construction experience or, in some cases, a sideline for established remodelers or for tradesmen looking for a turnkey business model built around their skills. In home renovation, franchises are increasingly visible in insurance restoration and in maintenance and repair. For the industry as a whole, size matters because so many of these companies are so small.

How It's Done: Residential remodeling revenue data for the list is gathered from a Web-based survey developed by REMODELING. The Farnsworth Group, a consultancy and business-data collection provider in Indianapolis, programmed and hosted the Web-based survey and collected and compiled the data. Additional information was obtained by REMODELING editors through survey mailings, phone calls, and public information sources.

Full-Service Remodelers

These companies offer the range of services, in-house or subcontracted, that allow them to build the additions and alterations (think kitchen and bath renovations, master suites) that substantially change the look, feel, or square footage of a home. Many specialize in a particular type of renovation — kitchens and baths, for instance, or historical restoration — but big custom projects, either designed by the company or built off an architect's plans, are what their business is about.

When the recession put the housing market on hold a few years back, full-service remodelers were especially vulnerable and many downsized, voluntarily or otherwise. Now, after a few years of uncertainty, many see business gaining, with more and larger projects in the pipeline. Many full-service remodelers on this list project modest revenue increases this year. Some, such as John Rusk of Rusk Renovations, in NY., see substantial — double digit — increases in revenue for 2013.

Replacement Contractors

Replacement contractors focus on short-cycle jobs in which just four to six weeks may transpire between getting a homeowner's signature on a contract and collecting the final check for the finished job. The average sale is typically less than $10,000, and companies focus their energies on selling and installing a handful of (typically) exterior components such as roofing, siding, or windows.

Because job size is smaller than the types of additions and alterations remodelers do, replacement companies need many jobs to sustain business. A remodeling company might install fewer than 100 jobs in a year; replacement companies often do more than 500 installs. Some even do several thousand.

The companies on this list are bigger than their full-service counterparts and are more aggressive in marketing and selling. They spend three or four times as much revenue on marketing as the average business — even the average remodeling business.

Franchises

The number of firms offering home improvement services as a saleable franchise has risen in the last 10 years. Some, such as The Glass Doctor or CertaPro, specialize in repair; others, such as Window World, in replacement; and a handful — take N-Hance or DreamMaker Bath & Kitchen, for example — in full-on remodeling. Franchises usually attract entrepreneurs looking for an opportunity or tradespeople, such as plumbers, seeking to acquire a turnkey business and the marketing power of a national brand. Franchises such as ServPro and Paul Davis now dominate one particular type of renovation: insurance restoration services. To get an idea of what it would cost to own a franchise business, add to the initial franchise fee, listed here, an annual royalty of 5% to 7% of sales taken by the franchisor, plus capital outlay for equipment or office/warehouse space.

Insurance Restoration

Jeff Petrucci remembers how he became an insurance restoration contractor. The owner of Bloomfield Construction, in Bloomfield Hills, Mich., stumbled on an insurance estimate five years ago at a prospect's home and realized that it was "a complete breakdown" of the job he was there to sell. Today at least half Bloomfield Construction's business is insurance restoration, which involves renovating a house in the aftermath of a fire, flood, or other calamity. Twenty-four-hour service is mandatory. If a tree falls on someone's roof on a Saturday night, Petrucci says he has to be there.

Companies that specialize in insurance work either "mitigate" (i.e., clean up), restore the house to its original condition, or both. Since the company insuring the house is paying the bill and the goal is to restore the house to its previous condition, the sale is about how quickly and effectively a company can do the work. Operations such as $1 billion-plus Belfor — and even smaller regional players such as Statewide Disaster Restoration — are set up almost along military lines to mobilize and respond to homeowners in emergency situations.

Steady work made insurance restoration tempting to some remodelers during the recession. Petrucci found that he had to reinvent his business to get good at it because of the extra skills required to be successful.
