OUR ANNUAL LIST OF THE NATION'S BIGGEST HOME IMPROVEMENT COMPANIES

PRESENTING THE

remodeling

550

The biggest remodeling companies in the U.S. reveal their sales, jobs, and prospects Few industry pyramids have as wide a base and narrow a top as remodeling. Census reports suggest that two-thirds of America's roughly 650,000 remodelers are self-employed. Only 90,000 companies of any size have a payroll. And if past trends hold, no more than one out of six of those take in a million dollars a year.

The 550 companies on this year's list occupy the very top of the pyramid. For the vast majority of them, 2013 was a decent year and 2014 looks to be a great one. Revenue for full-service companies dipped just 0.3% from 2012 to total $1.09 billion, but those same companies are looking for a 35% revenue rise this year to $1.48 billion. Replacement contractors did much better, having gone up 8.1% last year to hit $2.35 billion, but they are a tad less optimistic about this year, predicting an 11.9% gain.

Many full-service remodelers would rather have a few big-dollar projects than a host of small-dollar ones. Our latest numbers indicate that the average value of a job has continued to drop since 2010 and is far lower than it was when the housing market was at its peak. But at least the number of jobs rose again.

Our 550 consists of four lists. The first shows full-service remodelers—general contractors who typically focus on home additions and alterations. Then we list replacement contractors, who usually specialize in exterior home components such as roofing or siding. The list of insurance restoration businesses tracks companies that rebuild homes following fire, flood, or other disaster, with insurers footing the bill. And, finally, there are franchise operations. Companies such as CertaPro Painters or Re-Bath can be a point of entry for entrepreneurs who lack construction experience or, in some cases, a sideline for established remodelers or tradesmen.

HOW WE DID IT

Data for the list came primarily from a Web-based survey we developed. Project manager Amy Wiersum led the effort, while intern Chelsea Blahut did much of the cleanup and data analysis. The Farnsworth Group, a consultancy and business-data collection provider in Indianapolis, programmed and hosted the survey and compiled the data. Additional information was obtained by REMODELING editors through survey mailings, phone calls, and public sources.

Full-Service Remodelers

These are general contractors whose forte is typically additions and alterations. Often they'll also build a whole house for you; in fact the remodeling revenue shown here represents only 75% of the total sales these businesses recorded. You also will find them doing handyman work, either in their core business or as part of a side venture; a total of 125 firms in this group did, and that revenue is included. The 300 companies on this year's list took in a collective $1.09 billion last year from 49,209 jobs. That's about 164 projects per firm, though the range went from two jobs to 2,400. The average project for all 300 brought in $22,199, but once again the ranges were enormous: from $729,000 down to just $1,200. All but about 20 said that they did whole-house remodels and kitchen/bath work. Two-thirds worked on basements, half did sunrooms, and one-third offered energy upgrades. They expect their remodeling income to rise 35% next year, to $1.48 billion.

Replacement Contractors

This group focuses on mostly exterior home components such as siding or roofing. They install smaller jobs than the full-service remodelers, but do far more of them. On average, this year's 170 replacement contractors on the list did 15 times as many jobs as full-service remodelers—about 2,500 apiece. That's one reason why they spend three or four times as much revenue on marketing as the average remodeling business. But at around $6,000 per job, they took in only about a quarter of the money per project as full-service remodelers. All told, these 170 companies racked up $2.41 billion in revenue in 2013, and they're looking to grow that sum by 11.6% this year, hitting $2.69 billion. Nearly three-quarters of the companies listed here say they work with windows and doors, five-eighths do siding, half handle roofing, three-eighths work with gutters, and a quarter deal with insulation.
